INTRODUCTION.

The East St. Louis Directory has become an absolute necessity, not only on account of its worth to the local merchants and business men by furnishing them with an alphabetical list of all the inhabitants, but to the outside world who have learned to patronize it as well, and every merchant in St. Louis now desires to transact business with the people here, and as a means of becoming acquainted finds no easier method than a liberal use of the directory affords.

The whole country now treats East St. Louis as a great city, which must be dealt out in a business way. The old town methods will no longer suffice, as the change of conditions have also caused a wonderful change in business, and the manner of procuring it. A few years ago none of the great firms of St. Louis cared about working the field on this side, but now on account of an abundance of first-class houses at home, nothing but constant attention on the part of outsiders will give a footing in the commercial line here. All classes of business have progressed wonderfully and according to the opinions of men who have fortunes invested in East St. Louis, the city will continue to advance in all lines, until it reaches that position in the commercial and manufacturing world, which nature and the great work of financiers, railroad men and its staunch friends desire it to fill. Although it has progressed greatly in many branches, it seems to be specially favored as a manufacturing center, and long before the end of the next year, it will no doubt far surpass any city in the west of its size as a mart in this line. Elliot's Frog and Switch Works, Wuerpels, the Tudor Works, the Malleable Iron Works, the Western Forge Works, the Freeman Wire Works, the Todd Pulley Works, the Steel Post and in fact every other class of iron factory has almost doubled its capacity in the past year, and it is said all contemplate making more extensions to their plants. The great stock yards on the north end handled more stock last season than in any two former seasons. The cattle, hogs and sheep have not been sent to this place as a main watering station either. Vast herds, flocks and droves of the animals have arrived at the pens on foot, but in a short space of time were killed and cured in one or the other of the great packing and storage houses at the yards. In former years, many loads were merely transferred from one road to another after a day's feeding but now with the increased facilities for killing and packing, the owners of all consignments find a ready market at the place, and as a consequence the stock market here has become one of the leading industries of the country. The factories at the yards under new managements have taken on a new life and with the great Swift works in full blast will soon compare with any point in the country. Few cities now surpass us in this industry, and a less number equal us. A number of new railroads have been constructed with terminals here and many more will find yards in East St. Louis, before the close of the present year, all of which add new facilities to the town and assist in pushing it along in its career of success. No other city in the land possesses its advantages for all classes of manufacturing. The place offers cheap lands for sites, coal can be had at 4 cents per bushel, water almost free of charge, and the methods of shipment are excellent, either by water or rail. In point of railroads, East St. Louis is the second largest center in the world, and as they are all closely connected by belt lines a factory placed any where within its limits can transact business with ease and dispatch. But it is not alone in the manufacturing world that East St. Louis boasts of its particular advancement. Every line of business has progressed. Through the endeavors of the real estate and other financial interests she has spread out over territory which but a couple of years ago was barren, residences, business and manufacturing houses have sprung up as if by magic and the scene is one of progress and development. But of course the change had its cause. Capital never came here unsolicited. The work of Mayor M. M. Stephens and his government gave the city its start which effected the change and pushed it on its booming career. Internal improvements were commenced. The dangerous crossing at Broadway was eliminated by the building of the viaduct and the commencement of the elevated street system and thorough system of electric street railroads were the key notes which invited the men of means to our door. Front street, Collinsville avenue, Broadway, Main street, Third street and the Broadway extension, gave the world to understand that the government and the people of East St. Louis meant business and the tide of advancement followed. The McCasland opera house sprang up. The Deering's and McCormick's made this city their principal shipping point, the glass works and other industries which needed good roads located here, and as all kinds of protection is afforded them in the police and fire departments and their business has rapidly increased, they naturally feel more than satisfied with the location. But it would be useless to attempt to enumerate and name the factories, firms and kinds of business which have located and been developed in the past year or two. To any one who visited East St. Louis only five years ago, and then returned in the spring of '93 such a change would be noticed by him, that he could scarcely realize that the place he saw before occupied the same ground upon which the Queen City of Egypt stands. And yet it is believed by the leading men of East St. Louis, that what has been done, is but a trifle compared with the advancement which she will make this year and next. The energy and perseverance of the real estate men assisted by the excellent management of city affairs will no doubt invite many new great corporations to locate here.
